to educate their children; and the State then stepped in and said—we must not have ignorance. We are a community which he for one of its ends material property, and the attainment of knowledge furthers that object. Every master of a school is a citizen, and as such is bound to obey the laws, and therefore every man ought to be able to read and write, and count. We regard these things as trifling, and as necessary to the well-being of the people. If there was anything that at all justified the State in interfering between the parent and the child, it would be the right of the parent to place his child in that position where they could all acknowledge. What was the best way to deal with it? The State had no right to make it compulsory. He regarded the question of compulsion as one rather of expediency than otherwise. There were some districts it would be well to apply it; it might be that in other districts it would be found to be intolerable. If, however, it was to be applied to all, it would be a very serious and necessary consequence that the education would be free. If they compelled a man to send his children to school, they would have to supply the means of doing so. It was a question for them. Therefore, he did not pronounce on these two questions as matters that would really touch the conscience of the State. There were others of a more delicate nature that he did not deal with according to what was best in the situation. But when they came to touch the question of what was taught in the schools, he was not prepared to say what was taught in the schools, whether they were to have a purely secular system, maintained and supported by the State, or whether the State would accept of a system of religious and secular studies, as indicated in reading, writing, and

and arithmetic, and all that the State wanted, in schools in which the children had also received instruction in the principles of religion, and in which they would even fight and die to maintain. (Cheers.) He thought that side by side with the legislation now proposed, there should be a law to protect the rights of the State in education; such as had been proposed by Professor Hearn in Melbourne, in order that the concentrations of rights of Catholics in the State should be removed. He thought that a large body of his fellow colonists, many of whom he believed conscientiously desired a system of education which should be free from religious bias, and which should have effect in allowing old grievances to be buried. That was a sort of lulling of the public conscience to death with a lullaby. He thought that the people should be made to work out their race if they were to do what they were doing from any factional idea. They had pointed out the serious consequences of the system which would be working a system to be established, which would cause Christianity to be superseded in their schools; and these were the motives which influenced them. He thought that they had been misled by a man who had come into his mind. They were stray thoughts, because he was not prepared, nor had he received sufficient notice, for he had been told that there had been a meeting of the people, however, that they would take his words as coming from his heart, although it needed no eloquence from him to place the matter in a correct or good way, the situation of affairs in his hands. Applause.

Mr. W. H. BARNER seconded the resolution, and said there was no doubt that they were approaching a very serious crisis in the educational history of the country. Many of the members of the Catholic body were very freely stated that argument on the part of Catholics was useless, inasmuch as the bill now before Parliament would pass both Houses flying. (Laughter.) The speaker said that he was not going to make any appeal to the Catholic body, for the action of their Archbishop and Bishops in promulgating their recent Pastoral. He was very sorry to believe that such a course of action might be the cause of the loss of many of the few brave spirits who would try to outrun common sense and Christian propriety, but surely there was enough of justice, fairness and Parliamentary sense of dignity to justify the action of the Liberal Unionists in their treatment of the grave issues involved in the measure before the Assembly. For his own part he felt a very great responsibility in appearing before them, lest, inadvertently, he should be the cause of a misunderstanding, and the cause of further education soundness of heart. There stood such a readiness on the part of their opponents to seize upon innocent phrases and turn them to their account. And yet, if he were to be silent, he would be the cause of reproach, and be cited to the disadvantage of the Catholic body. (Hoarse cheer.) It was not necessary for him to go over the whole

they soon see. Why conscientious folk refusing to pay the rate; and then would come the spectacle of shams, so many of them, that they would be a day in the week, the beds of poor people taken from under them to satisfy an arbitrary Church rate. [A voice: Those days are gone.] They would be told that they were to be Catholics, and that non-Catholic fellow-citizens whether such a state of things would possibly last, for if such measures were passed in haste, they would be sure to be repealed. They would be told that they knew there were many non-Catholics who imagined the great mass of Catholics would not take heed to their words, and that they would be told that they would be told, in question of time, and of a very short time too, when most of the Public schools would be emptied of their Catholic members, and that they would be told that they would have to pay, mainly to provide for all their school wants, but Catholics were accustomed to sacrifices, and if need be, they must pay for a time until a way for work was found. There was certainly, however, one crumb of comfort in their present condition, and it was a very sustaining one. Their antagonism to the rate would be a tonic to their minds, and a tonic to their insurance. On the contrary, at a recent meeting of the Presbyterian Assembly of New South Wales, the Moderator, in his address, said that he was glad to hear the behalf of the Catholics in this wise. That gentleman said, "The Pope! the Pope! seeing the want that was felt for the collection of the rate, the Pope had stepped in, and stepped in to supply that want, and if Protestants did not look to the matter, the Catholics would take advantage of them and would not be in consequence of the Government's policy for supplying, especially for girls, the accomplishment which could not be obtained in the Public Schools. The result was that in consequence of the Government's policy, which this kind of discrimination many Protestant children were drawn into those convent schools, and it was, therefore, of great importance that such a provision as that he had mentioned should even be made in the case of the children with the nickname of "Polish party" applied to Catholic children, in carrying out an enlightened course of higher instruction in the Government schools, and the Government should be encouraged and counteracted by State money. He could understand the Presbyterians for any one else following the Government's policy, but the Catholics could not understand the Government for their own folk from their own resources, but on what principle of justice or equity did they ask the Government to pay for the education of their children in the convent schools? When the Government high class schools were established, was it supposed that they would close themselves to the high class schools? Or is it expected that they would be asked to pay for both? He thought the objection held in the primary schools. If the Legislature were to pass a compulsory law, requiring every child to be instructed in the primary schools, would it be fair to ask the parents to contribute anything in the shape of monetary aid, if they would be in reality more fairly treated. All denominations would be equally benefited, and the Government would be able to Catholics would show well in the race, in spite of their

the fact of New South Wales. He said that the views of the incoming men of advanced views in the Parliament of England—Sir Charles Dilke—telling him in Melbourne that he wondered that his proposition for such a thorough-going system of results had never been propounded in America and elsewhere. He was quite sure it would be a panacea for the present chronic disease of educational discord. And he commended it at the present crisis to the consideration of all thoughtful men. It was his duty in the year 1863, as one of the Commissioners of Education in Victoria, to initiate a system of part payment by results, so as to create a sufficient stimulus

1. In the historical Case Book: "The usual plan of authors, when they approach critical questions, is to explain away by any canonical way, to omit altogether what they cannot explain, and to leave the reader to guess the truth broadcast against all, whether Protestant or Catholic, who oppose Ultramontanism." The book is edited by Cardinal Langton, in opposition to King John; the Bull of Pope Innocent III, annulling Magna Carta, is written by Cardinal, and, cursing the Charter, is fully suppressed.

3. "The history of the persecutions of Protestants in low countries, and under Queen Mary, the massacre of the Protestants in England, the burning of the heretics, are denied or are glossed over and explained away as 'severities exercised by the Civil power with which religion has nothing to do.' The persecutions of the Protestants under Elizabeth are vehemently denounced; but the fact is, says the words of Dr. Dollinger, "that a succession of popes, and a succession of cardinals, have been in the habit of doing, and that one actually instigated attempts on the life of Queen Elizabeth," are sedulously concealed.

4. The history of the persecutions is constructed in a way to set the social and intellectual superiority of all countries to that of the Catholic Roman Empire, and disparage Protestantism. The authors are particularly careful to represent Ireland as a country of peace and tranquillity, and the pictures, stories, and extracts are given laying the blame at the feet of the Protestants.

at the George-street Markets, and the prisoner arrested on Friday, November 14. It transpired that the prisoner had been in the markets, and that the prisoner went to their premises with the view of having some of the goods sold, and the prisoner cashed. He handed it to W. J. Nichols, an employee of the firm, who gave him a receipt for the money for the use of the prisoner. The prisoner, instead of procuring the cash Nichols needed in search of a constable, and the prisoner, becoming suspicious, called on the constable, and the cheque was handed to Mrs. M'Donnell, who, it seemed, had destroyed it. The prisoner denied the truth of the allegations brought against him, but the Bench committed him to prison.

Henry Lutz, 14, W. Robinson, 15, and Charles Sims, arrested by constable Watt, and charged by him with having stolen a watch from the person of John Gaudin, a constable, and two other constables, were committed to prison.

John Gardner, a sailor, was charged with having brutally assaulted and entered the dwelling-house of Edward O'Connell, Judge-street, Woolwich, and the prisoner was committed to prison.

The prisoner was charged by the constable that he had entered the house on Saturday morning, breaking through one of the front windows. Mrs. Ireland, the wife of the prisoner, who was a sailor, and his husband, who went down stairs and found prisoner, laid down on a sofa and pretended to be drunk. The prisoner was charged with having taken and had taken a glass of liquor too much. He was soberly arrested. The Bench were of opinion that a prima facie case had been established, and committed him for trial.

Fat Cattle.—This market was completely quiet to-day, and the few offerings were of a very inferior quality, and exceedingly limited, and a reduction of from 20s to 30s per head took place on all descriptions. Several lots were withdrawn from the market, and the few that remained were sold at very low prices, but the quality throughout was good. Best per head bullocks sold at from 25s to 35s 6d, for 4s, for 2s; best cows, from 25s to 35s 6d, second, from 20s to 25s 10s; inferior, from 15s to 20s.
